Selection Method

Applications will be reviewed from the following perspectives and a decision will be made based on:

- Demonstration of a strong need of a grant from JFT
- Contents of the project: Past achievement of organization, artistic or academic quality, pioneering approach, future potential, sustainability and development of plan, etc.

- System for project implementation: Feasibility of plan, status of preparations, cost-benefit of a performance, exhibition, conference, etc.
- Role of grantee organization and impact on promotion of Japanese arts and culture or Japanese studies in the country and region
- Specific outcome expected
- Coalition with other organizations and groups
- Ability to raise funds from sources other than the Japan Foundation, including the organization's own funds

Projects that fall under the following criteria will be given lower priority:

- Projects from applicants who have received grants from JF Head Office or JFT in the same fiscal year
- Projects whose effects are limited to exchanges between specific groups/individuals
- Projects with an extremely low number of participants and attendees

JF policy limiting support to organizations for a maximum of three consecutive years:

This is a measure to avoid providing ongoing support to the same applicant, and to distribute grants to as many applicants as possible. Unless the Japan Foundation believes that there is a compelling reason to continue with support, organizations that have continuously received funds from the same grant program for the past three fiscal years will not be provided with funds for the fourth fiscal year. Applicants may apply for a fourth round of support, but should be aware that lower priority will be placed on their application.
